A Grove of Cocoanut Palms at Waimea on the Wailua River To Be Utilized In That Product.

LIHUE, October 30.-About fifteen years Mr. Lindermann living over by the Wailua river set out forty acres in cocoanut palms. Situated at the mouth of the river the grove was exposed to the strong trade winds and made very slow growth. About eight years ago a wind break of ironwood trees was planted and since that time the palms have been taking on new strength and are now in a fine, healthy condition. Mr. Lindermann's idea was to sell the nuts in their natural state. He left the country, however, before the trees came into full bearing, at the same time turning all his interests over to the Lihue Plantation Co. This concern being busy with its sugar production. had no time to meddle with cocoanut growing and therefore leased the grove to a Chinaman, who for several years raised a drove of hogs on the product. The lease to the Pake ran out some time ago ed empty by Train 12. Daily except and the forty acres of fine palms have since been leased by A. D. sunday. Hills, the superintendent of the Lihue Ice and Electric Power Co.

Mr. Hills, who hails from Tahiti, has all kinds of ideas of the money that is concealed in the hairy nut and is decided on taking advantage

He has as yet utilized the nuts only as feed for his pigs, for which m., dally except Sunday; dispatch to Train 7-11 due to leave daily at 11:05 a. purpose they are exceedingly valuable. It is, however, in the form of Alea, P art Otty, Walpahu, Ewa. copra that the cocoanut gives the most satisfactory results. Copra is the dried meat of the nuts and is the raw material from which the cocoanut oil is derived. In former days it was the custom to ship the cocoanuts whole to San Francisco where all the parts of the nut could Company, atluku Sugar Company, be utilized. Being very bulky, the freight amounted to such a sum that there was practically nothing left for the grower. Now only a few of the South Sea Islands ship their product in that way. The majority prepare the meat and forward it to the coast in form of copra.

The fibre surrounding the nuts is used for the manufacture of mats, but being very light and bulky is adapted to shipments from such places only that have the benefit of a much lower freight rate than Hawaii. As well the fibre and shell as the dried branches form a valuable fuel and would therefore make a valuable item for plantations without an adequate supply of wood for their laborers,

The crop is not one adapted to small farming as it takes ten years to bring the trees into full bearing. To many plantations with tracts of land unfit both for cane cultivation and pasturage the cocoanut could be made a source of future revenue. The Lihue Plantation is looking at the question in this light and have already planted out several thousand palms in their Hanamaulu gulch.—The Garden Island.
